Summer Term Homes in the Past

I already know...

There are similarities and differences between life in the past and life now.

Vocabulary

home - the place where someone lives

house - a building that is a home for a person, people or family

source - something that gives us information about an event, place or person from the past

testimony - the sharing of a person's experiences and opinions, based on their memories technology - the use of knowledge to invent new devices or tools to make the user's life easier

Victorian era - a period of time in the past from 1837 to 1901, when Queen Victoria was the monarch of the United Kingdom

Timeline

Within living memory is a period of time from now to around 100 years ago. It covers the time period that you, your friends, your parents and carers, and your grandparents have lived.

We can count living memory in jumps of ten years. Ten years is called a decade. One hundred years is called a century.

Enquiry questions

- Why are there lots of different types of homes?
- How and why have homes changed within living memory?
- How do we know so much about homes in the past?
- What impact has technology had on our homes?
